JOSIAH HARRIS.

Josiah Harris of Machias, (later, East Machias,) Me., town clerk, clerk of courts, and register of probate, was born in Boston, Mass., February 27, 1770. Early in April, 1787, while yet in his teens, he went to Machias, where he entered the employment of James Avery, Esq.

Mr. Avery was one of the most important men of the town; a justice of the peace, select man, the first town clerk, the first representative to the General Court, the first register of probate for Washington County, and, later, judge of the Court of Common Pleas.

Young Harris remained with him a little more than a year, working most of the time in the office at Machias, writing out various legal and other public documents, and assisting in records and correspondence, but also active on Mr. Avery's farm at the "Rim."

June 23, 1788, he set sail for Boston. After reaching there, he first engaged with Mr. Matthew Clark, a merchant of Charlestown; but in May, 1789, he found employment in Mr. Lemuel Cravath's shop in Boston. Mr. Cravath giving up business, the young man started a second time for Machias, October 5, 1789, in the service of Edward H. and Nathaniel J. Robbins, of Milton, who were the founders of Robbinston, Me. Later he was in partnership with them, and still later was in mercantile business for himself until a few years before his death, which occurred June 17, 1845.

He was descended from John Harris of Charlestown, who married Amy Hills in 1658 or earlier and afterward moved to North Yarmouth, Me., where he was captured by the Indians in September, 1688.

Amy Hills was a daughter of Joseph Hills (a woolen-draper of Malden, England, who moved to Charlestown,) and Rose Dunster (a sister of Henry Dunster, the first president of Harvard College, and daughter of Henry Dunster of Balehoulth, Lancashire, England). Rose Dunster Hills died March 24, 1649-50.
